Personally, I found this sourcebook to be rather unpolished and lacking in focus or theme. It just feels like a random collection of monsters with a tendency towards to weird, unrealistic, and the downright ridiculous (examples: a human-torso devil with a lower body of a snail who lairs in a river, and an "all-legs" spider aberration, and a fat manipulative devil who likes to put on make-up).

Fiend Folio is any of three products published for successive editions of the fantasy role-playing game Dungeons & Dragons (D&D). All three are collections of monsters.. The bulk of the material in the first edition came from the British gaming magazine White Dwarf, rather than being authored by Gary Gygax, the game's co-creator. Readers and gamers had submitted creatures to the "Fiend Factory ...

First published in 1981, the Fiend Folio, Tome of Creatures Malevolent and Benign, was according to the inside forward, "the first major British contribution to the Advanced Dungeon's and Dragons game system". With a Githyanki looking out ominously from the cover the Fiend Folio was presented as a companion to the earlier Monster Manual.

The monsters presented in the Fiend Folio used the revised method of calculating skill points and feats, and require very little adjustment as a result. The only 3.5 rules not incorporated into the Fiend Folio were the new damage reduction system and the new method of pricing constructs. The Fiend Folio lists two others, which are: Varakhut. These protect the integrity of divinity by hunting down beings who are attempting to ascend to godhood. Should the attempt be successful, however, the varakhuts will defend the new god as part of the natural order, as they are also tasked with hunting down any being who attempts to kill a god.

The Monster Manual III was published in 2004, specifically, in August. While the MM2 was a 3.0 product, and the Fiend Folio was published right at the beginning of 3.5 (with a few oddities and outliers), MM3 was solidly 3.5. Gone are the Beast and Shapechanger types; gone is the arbitrary assignment of feats and skill points.
