I was told by the tech at Rivera that "The carb is an eliminator II maufactured after 1996. More than likely it is jetted for an evolution motor which would be a little lean for a shovel." and that turning the adjustment screw would probably take care of it. But I believe I am just going to pull it and rebuild it along with a jet change.

SU Carb - The Worlds Sole Manufacturer of Genuine SU Parts

To tune SU carbs, first locate the following components: Throttle linkage nuts. These are the things that connect the throttle linkage (the bar connected to your foot through whatever means your car uses, cables or rods) to the carburetors' throttle levers. Throttle stop screws. These set the idle speed for each carb, and are located ...
